

James Andanje

MSC. RENEWABLE ENERGY STUDENT
MAKERERE UNIVERSITY

JAMES ANDANJE BARASA (a Kenyan) holds a bachelor's degree in Chemical & Process Engineering from Moi University. Presently a graduate student, pursuing MSc in Renewable Energy at Makerere University courtesy of MIRET scholarship.

Prior to joining Makerere University, Andanje was privileged to work for and with a number of companies in waste water management and co-generation which promote the use of waste for energy production, consequently inducing the thirst for clean energy and energy efficiency in him. In addition, his goal among others is to identify sustainable green energy potential and development energy solution for both private and public entities considering the global emphasis. Beyond academics, he has established interpersonal skills where he "opens eyes" of school leavers to make informed decisions based on career pursuits and life in general. Being at Makerere gives him an opportunity for learning while doing -where he believes young scholars like himself will participate in research projects and as well as learning from seasoned academics of repute at Makerere University.
